An alternative frame of reference for geriatric practice is presented centering on the concept of productive ageing. This perspective acknowledges and respects the unique contributions made by older adults to others whether they be individuals, families, groups, organizations, or society as a whole. The concept of productive ageing is not limited to older adults who are employed in the labor force. It recognizes the value and importance of contributions made by all older adults, regardless of their employment status. The concept of productive ageing is not limited to older adults who are employed in the labor force. It recognizes the value and importance of contributions made by all older adults, regardless of their employment status.